STONY BROOK CASE City Should Have Alleged Necessity for Land Condemnation and Offered

Proof.

The dissenting opinion in the Stony Brook water rights case, written by Judge J. W. Wheeler of the supreme court of errors, has been received by Clerk Parsons of the superior court. Three out of the five judges concurred in the opinion which sustained the contention put up by the attorneys for the city in attempting to take the land and acquire the water rights. Judge Wheeler avers that the question in this case is whether without notice to the owners the board of wa-ter commissioners of the city of Norwich by its mere vote to condemn land and water rights in an adjoining town, determine the condemnation and the necessity so that it need not allege it in its application to condemn or offer proof. If the legislature can delegate such authority to a municipal corporation, then it can delegate it to a private corporation, writes the judge in his opinion. The necessity should have been alleged and proof offered. The city of Norwich can obtain all the land it wants through certain statthe land it wants through certain suar-ute provisions, which the judge cites.
